

Actesy delivers scaling tool for BLP Digital published on startupticker.ch

With over 380 interfaces under its belt, HSG spin-off actesy is a sought-after partner for software developers and digitalisation consultants such as PwC. Now, AI start-up BLP Digital is also relying on the solution for more thrust in scaling - the two start-ups are entering into a partnership for this purpose.

Many companies are pushing ahead with their digital transformation. Process automation is usually one of the first „game changers“, with solutions based on artificial intelligence (AI) increasingly being used for data processing. Since companies usually work with several business systems and different databases, these must be linked for automation. This usually requires some interfaces.

This is where actesy comes into play: The HSG spin-off, founded in 2017, unifies the data from the different business systems and databases on a central platform with its solution. actesy now has over 380 adapters available for networking between the systems. These adapters ensure the integration of the different systems and make the programming of individual interfaces superfluous. New software solutions for automation processes can be integrated more easily and quickly.

BLP Digital has developed such a software solution: The AI-based software can read document-based ERP processes in a fully automated way from day one, without any prior knowledge of the documents. To do this, the software needs seamless access to the data relevant to the ERP processes. Just as important, however, is how this data is fetched from the upstream systems and can flow into BLP Digital.

This is where the partnership between actesy and BLP Digital begins: In the future, the AI start-up will use actesy's adapters to be able to onboard its customers faster. Andreas Imthurn, co-founder of actesy, says: „The partnership with BLP Digital underlines the universal applicability of our integration solution, regardless of the underlying technology or data source“. The actesy solution is integrated as standard with BLP Digital. With an additional actesy licence, BLP Digital customers can „unlock“ further adapters and thus further expand their degree of automation - for example for a marketplace.

In addition to BLP Digital, other start-ups such as the software developer Trade Monkey, qashqade and the ETH spin-off Modulos have been using the actesy adapters for scaling since this autumn. „As an industry-independent solution, we have customers from the entire DACH region,“ says Imthurn. Among them are established large companies such as Porsche or PwC.
