

actesy: The New Star of Application Integration

St. Gallen, 27 September 2017

With actesy AG St. Gallen, there is a new star in the EAI sky today. With its revolutionary database-based software architecture, the start-up helps companies to renew existing application landscapes. EAI – or Enterprise Application Integration – aims to combine different business functions within the company. The main focus is on the interaction of different software packages in a business process oriented context.

The actesy metadata framework opens up completely new possibilities for integration, because the integration already takes place at the data level. In this way, different application logic is linked together on the basis of the data they use and create. From the user's point of view, an easy-to-modify browser interface provides direct access to the data and functions of the involved software packages.

The application possibilities are almost unlimited: Whether integrating existing applications, integrating additional solutions or modernizing – and ultimately replacing – outdated applications is the goal of the EAI project, these projects can be planned and implemented with the aid of the actesy framework. actesy Chief Executive Officer (CEO) Andreas Imthurn is convinced that "The actesy framework shows its strengths, especially in view of the digital change, in which additional functions and data suppliers have to be integrated in the overall context.

Although just founded, actesy can already point to successful integration projects. For example, a web shop was developed using the 3-tier plus framework and integrated with an existing ERP solution. In another application example, the data of a logistics service provider was integrated into the existing business solution. Finally, actesy has also been used to design selected functions for the field service for mobile devices such as smartphones and tablets.
